

Almost Arrogant

The big secret of the audition process is that Casting Directors are human. In fact, they are usually stressed out and very anxious humans.

Be the solution to their problem!

Casting Directors and Producers are reading the SUBTEXT of what you do and say.

Instead of letting your subtext say:

"Please pick me!"

"I hope I'm doing this right."

"What can I do to get this job?"

under words

Try using your subtext to say:

"I got this."

"Don't worry."

"Take it or leave it. I'm me."

Walk in the room like you've been invited. This is your time!

by Japheth Gordon

Two Types of INTERVIEW QUESTIONS

1) Professional Questions

They are asking because it affects the work.

Your answers should be honest and highlight the positives.

Examples:

Who's your agent/manager?

When is your birthday?

Where do you live?

Do you have a passport?

What's this on your resume?

2) Personality Questions

They are asking because they want to know what kind of human you are.

Your answers should be fun, proper length and unique to you.

Examples:

Where would you dream vacation be?

Who's your best friend?

Do you have hobbies outside of acting?

What's it like in your hometown?

Tell me about your name?

TRY SELF DEPRECCATION
There is an art to making fun of yourself without making it weird or evoking pity.